Mr. C. K. BLISS

The advantages of a universal language will be readily granted—particularly one which is not open to the usual objections made against the learning of a second tongue. Mr. Bliss, a graduate of the University of Technology in Vienna, believes that his Semantography, a modern picto-ideography which can be read and understood in all languages, is the solution, a writing adequate not only for informal communication but also for the transmission of the most detailed scientific knowledge. The Extension Board is giving him the opportunity of demonstrating to a University audience his “Semantography” which has the support of Bertrand Russell and other leading authorities.
